Nowadays, Informatics is too comprehensive to have a definition. It includes the design and construction of hardware and software systems; design and management of networks and information systems; treatment, structuring and management of various types of information; scientific studies using computers; equipping computer systems with intelligent behavior; creation and use of communications and games; etc. The list is virtually endless and the possibilities are increasingly vast.

Communication skills

- In my professional and academic experience I had to communicate with people with the same technical knowledge and also with people with no technical knowledge of my area.

Being able to communicate without understanding problems from both parties I consider this an added value for companies that regularly contact with clients and work with teams.

Organisational / managerial skills

- During the course of Computer Engineering I have obtained good practices of teamwork.

- I tend to take the lead in the project, helping good cooperation between different groups / departments.

- I worked on projects in pairs, groups of 5 to 20 people.
